For many years photography was seen as a marginalized medium populated by a group of men consumed by technical prowess and the measuring of each other's equipment. They created many images, striving for the perfect print.

Then a group of women came along (Charlesworth, Levine, Sherman, Kruger...). They were unbridled by their non-membership and changed the way we understand an image as art. The artists in this show have used ceramics to define a new space for sculpture; much in the same way the artists of the 1980s & 1990s used photography to create a new language for themselves out of a medium that had previously existed in the margins.

ALL RIGHT is organized in collaboration with Ryan Conder.
